Harrison SPCA taking Bay-Waveland strays

Animal shelter closed

By BRENT MACEY
A special consultant to the Harrison County Humane Society Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has warned the City of Bay St. Louis could be liable for cruelty if animals stemming from current conditions at the Bay-Waveland Animal Shelter.

After a visit, Bay St. Louis Mayor Larry Bennett agreed to have all animals shipped to the Harrison County Humane Society Shelter at no charge until conditions at the animal shelter on Third Street can be improved or a new facility built at the Bay St. Louis location.

Sandra Koennan, SPCA consultant and also director of the Harrison County Animal Shelter, said the Harrison shelter, a private agency, usually charges government entities $10 per animal received.

"Because of the emergency condition in Bay St. Louis, we will accept their animals free until something can be arranged," Koennan said.

Koennan said she would be willing to train the Bay and Waveland dogcatcher how to clean the shelter, spot indications of disease, and how to anesthetize animals.

"There is no reason why that animal shelter could not become self-supporting," Koennan said.

She stated the Harrison County shelter deals with anywhere between 4,000 and 11,000 animals a year and works with a budget of $100,000 money mostly generated by the shelter.

Some $20,000 is allocated to the shelter by Harrison County, she said.

The Bay-Waveland Animal Shelter came under scrutiny from Koennan last Tuesday when she visited the site and discovered all the dogs diseased or exposed to disease.

As a result, some 65 of the animals were put to death that night. Some 30 or 40 of the dogs were killed in Bay St. Louis by drug injections administered by Harrison County officials and the Waveland dogcatcher, who worked under available street light and one flashlight loaned by a Bay St. Louis Police officer.

The remaining dogs were transported to Harrison County where Koennan and officials worked until 3:30 a.m. Wednesday morning anesthetizing dogs in a carbon monoxide chamber.

Koennan said a "nightmarish situation" at the Bay animal shelter came to light Tuesday when a Bay St. Louis dogcatcher brought 11 kittens and six puppies to the Harrison County Animal Shelter and explained the Bay shelter could not separate dogs from cats.

Koennan explained she began asking questions concerning conditions at the Bay-Waveland Animal Shelter and later called to see if the dogcatcher's trip was authorized and if the city was willing to pay the expense.

Bay considering space-age sewerage treatment

By BRENT MACEY
Three options of meeting the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's clean water standards by 1985 have been presented to the Bay St. Louis City Council.

The first option, to join a treatment system established by the State Legislature and managed by a three-county regional authority, was ruled out by the council last January when Mayor Larry Bennett vetoed a motion to join that system.

Pressure to meet the deadline then led the council to consider joining a activated sludge treatment facility currently operating in Waveland. The council recently met with the Waveland Authority and the authority's engineer, Lewis Esion, to learn more about that system before agreeing to join.

One week after that meeting, the council approved a motion to advertise its intent to join that facility.

However, at the end of that meeting, Gene Taylor, Ward One councilman, presented a new system recently developed by a scientist at the National Space Technology Laboratories in La., currently constructing two treatment facilities in Louisiana based on that new technology.

That system is also being considered by other cities along the coast as an alternative to an activated sludge system proposed by the three-county regional authority.

Dr. B.C. Wolverton, senior research scientist at NSTL, explained the new concept during a recent interview as a major technological breakthrough in wastewater treatment and water

The system has been approved by the Federal EPA as an innovative system for treating municipal sewage.

Because the system is considered innovative, Wolverton said the government would finance 85 percent of the cost involved in constructing the facility.

If the system fails, Wolverton said the government would pay 100 percent of the cost to build a new system.

However, he noted the money might not be available, and said his statement

By reservation only, please!

An apparent misunderstanding has led the impression reservations are unnecessary for the Hancock County Chamber of Commerce Summer Buffet Friday.

Chamber Executive Secretary Jerry Bennett emphasizes reservations are a must for the event and should be made no later than Monday.

Bennett noted reservations apparently resulted from the fact tickets will not be mailed. Those holding reservations, he stated, will be available at the door Friday evening.

Chamber officials said that people who had indicated interest in economy several days later to test a trial expansion of the system from an engineering company in Baton Rouge.

It is an idea that would cost less than half as much to operate as a conventional activated sludge system to operate," he said.

Waveland offers operating plant

By BRENT MACEY
"What we really are doing is making the bacteria do what we want them to do," Ethel Schott, plant technician for the Waveland Wastewater Plant said recently about the activated sludge treatment plant constructed 10 years ago by the City of Waveland.

Schott and Jean Longo are both class three operators at that plant. Both have been trained by the Mississippi Air and Water Pollution Control Operators Association.

For several hours early each morning they work in shifts at the treatment plant feeding samples of water flowing in and out of the plant. Through those tests they can determine if the plant is operating correctly.

The two stood on top of a large circular concrete tank, using a recent tour. Thousands of gallons of sewer sludge were being stirred back and forth by paddles driven by the plants generator. The stirring allows oxygen to enter the sludge so aerobic bacteria, bacteria requiring oxygen to live, can do their job.

"Hopefully they (the bacteria) are eating each other now," Longo says.

She points to another circular tank some 200 feet away.

"In that tank the same type bacteria are breaking the sludge down. Over here we try to cut off the food supply."

"Now they're eating each other,"

Schott says. "We turned them into cannibals," she says with a laugh.

Around the technicians, in about a three-acre area, other large circular tanks protrude from the ground. Walkways extend from one tank to another. A small building stands in the middle of the complex beside a deep square concrete hole, another building is located off to the side.

The Bay St. Louis sewerage system, now connected to an oxidation pond, recently agreed to advertise its intention to connect to this facility.

A petition signed by 30 percent of Bay St. Louis registered voters against joining the facility could force the issue Koenann said she got the grand run-around. The mayor was not in his office when she was told.

She said she was also told to just have the animals brought back.

Koenann said she was suspicious so she decided to take a look herself.

"I found dogs that looked like they were in a parved condition—it was horrible. Many had no hair at all. A lot of the dogs had matter in their eyes which is an indication of distemper. Some of the dogs were coughing," she stated.

"In our facility we attribute cough to kennel cough but from all the matter in their eyes in my opinion these dogs had distemper."

Koenann said she also observed bloody stools in the shelter, a symptom associated with parvo.

In addition, she said, male, female and small puppies were mixed together in the same pen.

Koenann contacted city hall but was again unable to reach the mayor.

She also called WLOX-TV in Biloxi and asked for a cameraman to come to Bay St. Louis.

Koenann and an assistant who had accompanied her to Bay St. Louis returned to the animal shelter to wait.

After more than an hour, a Bay police patrolman drove into the pound.

"He told us his orders were to have us run off," Koenann said.

"After I told him we were waiting for a Channel 13 cameraman, he said, 'I think I can get the mayor' and he left."

Bennett arrived some time later Koenann said. However, keys to the pound were not presented to her until about 6:30 p.m. that evening by the Waveland dogcatcher.

In the mean time, Koenann said she made several trips to Bay City Hall, the Bay Police Department, and back to the pound.

The Waveland dogcatcher, and a Harrison County dogcatcher eventually arrived. Together they worked to remove the animals and transport them to Gulfport.

Bennett Friday related the conditions at the dog pound to problems the city has with overcrowding of schools, jails, and low income housing.

"We have to set priorities," he said. Money which the city has allocated to the shelter is not enough to handle the conditions, Bennett said. He noted city council members are the only ones with the authority to change that allocation.

Bennett said he was talking with councilmen that night but one was out of town and others could not be contacted.

Also, Bennett said the Bay St. Louis dogcatcher is in the process of moving and could not be reached. Eventually he said he did manage to contact the Waveland dogcatcher who presented the keys.

"I'm very sorry she had to wait a few minutes but I did the best I could," he stated somewhat perturbed.

He admitted he was somewhat put off by Koenann.

"She told me she was a deputy sheriff in the Harrison County. If that is the type of attitude she is going to take I could just as well have told her that I'm the chief of police."

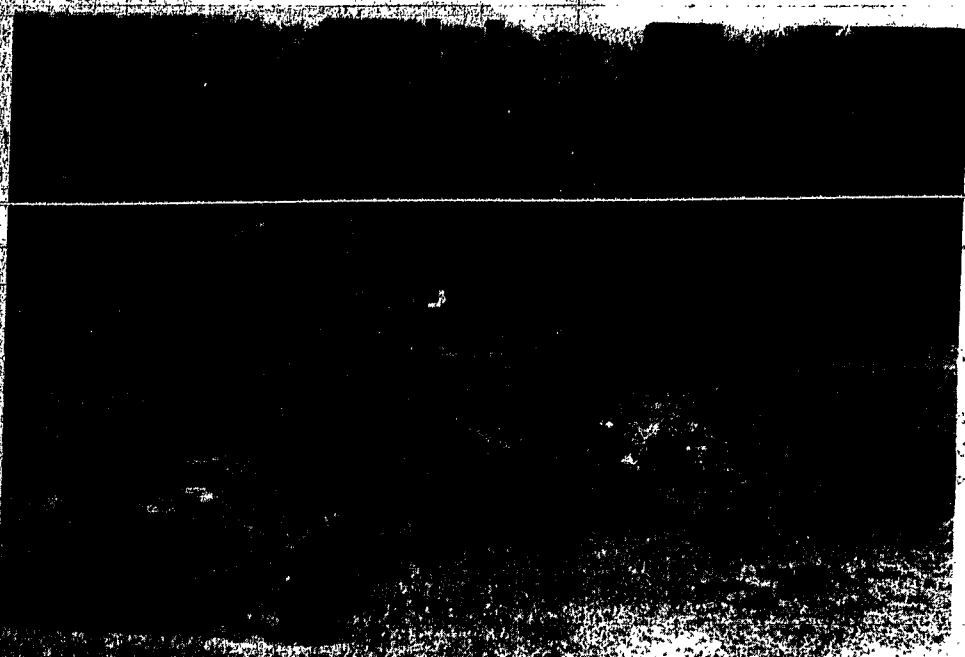

"I have a good relationship with the Hancock County Humane Society and if they had approached me about the situation I think it would have had a different effect," Bennett said.

He explained work is being done by the city to start construction of a new animal shelter at the Bay St. Louis oxidation pond.

Bennett said the city has transported railroad ties from the L&N Railroad in New Orleans to the site. Several loads of fill have also been trucked to the pond.

The area proposed for the site is in a sloping bank at that pond. Railroad ties will be used to contain fill which will support the building. The ties will also prevent the dirt from washing into a swampy area behind the site.

Bennett noted the city, Waveland and the county have each donated $5,000 to the construction of the shelter.

NSTL records 40,000

The National Space Technology Laboratories in Hancock County reports its visitors' Center has registered its 40,000th visitor since the center opened late last year.

Mrs. Lillian Wetekamp of Metairie, La. visited the installation July 28 with members of the local American Association of Retired Persons chapter. She was presented with mementos of the space program in honor of the occasion.

Mrs. Wetekamp said that she thinks the space program is "a miracle in our times" and that visiting the center was "a real experience." Coincidentally, Mrs. Wetekamp noted that her husband's brother is an engineer at the Kennedy Space Center where he has worked on projects ranging from the Apollo Program to the Space Shuttle.

Less than four months ago, 11-year-old Laura Kehler of Little Rock, Ark. became the 20,000th guest to register at NSTL's Visitors' Center, which opened Nov. 19, 1980 with expanded hours of operation.

The center is now open each Monday through Friday except holidays from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The enhanced exhibit area features indoor and outdoor exhibits and displays depicting the missions of NASA and NSTL resident agencies. The theme of the Visitors' Center is "Space-Oceans-Earth."

NASA's missions at NSTL are support of the Space Shuttle test program, research and development in Earth resources remote sensing technology, regional transfer of NASA-developed technology to applications and management of the total base in support of NASA programs and the programs of other resident agencies. Throughout each day, visitors can view film and slide presentations in the auditorium and the installation with Visitors' Center personnel. Cameras are allowed and gifts are available at the souvenir stand in the lobby of the Visitors' Center. There is no admission charge.

Schools, clubs and other groups may reserve a date and time for a tour by calling (901) 966-2311 or 966-2270.

Early preparation urgent for hurricane area

The first and best piece of advice for people living in hurricane-prone areas is to have a plan. Be prepared before a hurricane hits and know what actions to take first.

"Make an inventory of your household furnishings with their estimated value," said Frances Fortenberry.

County Agent's Notes

by John Smith

HERBICIDE INJURY

As temperatures get higher and rains become less frequent, expect soybeans to be more susceptible to injury from herbicide treatments. For over-the-top sprays, use herbicides with the least potential for crop injury.

Be particularly careful to see that young soybeans aren't slowed by herbicide injury, or any other reason for that matter. Don't apply 2,4-DB over the top except in special, salvage situations where older soybeans are covered with cocklebur.

Where soybeans are more than eight inches tall and weeds in the row can be covered with herbicide spray, directed sprays of 2,4-DB, Lorox, Sencor, Lexone or Paraquat are highly effective as mild to late season treatments. But again, don't apply these materials over the top. Be sure to observe labels for uses, rates and precautions for all herbicides you use. For more information on controlling weeds in soybeans, contact the county Extension office.

SOYBEAN LEAF LOSS

Depending on stage of growth, soybeans can tolerate varying amounts of leaf loss from insect damage without yield reductions. Through blooming, soybeans can withstand 35 percent defoliation; pod-set and pod-filling, 20 percent; and after pod-fill, 35 percent.

with each other without telephone service.

If you decide to stay at home, be prepared. You need to have on hand: boards, tools, a flashlight, battery-powered radio, extra batteries for radio and flashlight, candles, non-perishable foods and drinks, emergency cooking means, a lantern, fuel, matches, bleach and a first aid kit. Be sure to have at least a two-week supply of regular prescription medicines.

When you leave your home, have a predetermined place of refuge and know the route you'll take. Fill car with gasoline. Tie down, brace, board up and secure windows and doors. Unplug electric equipment except freezer and refrigerator. Turn them to the lowest setting. Be sure to keep all important papers and valuables with you.

When a hurricane watch is posted for your area, keep your radio on for future weather bulletins. A hurricane warning means the danger has materialized.

If a hurricane warning is issued, continue to monitor bulletins.

If an evacuation order is issued for your area, leave at once.

Food store chains trying outlets limited to totally processed items

No fresh foods available

With consumer concern and eliminate customer limited. These stores accept growing over-inflation, a number of food chains and independent are moving toward a new retail approach limited to totally processed items.

This kind of retailing is a reaction to consumer sensitivity to rising food prices, says Ann Rushing, Mississippi Cooperative Extension Service marketing specialist.

"Limited assortment stores offer lower prices because they offer smaller selections," she adds. "Selection is limited to about 500 grocery items. There are no dairy, meats and produce, are labor-intensive because of the necessary cutting and wrapping. These labor costs end up in the product."

"Even among groceries, there is only one size and one brand name of each item. Services are extremely of the rest of the dollar goes to meat, produce, and dairy products.

Chains experimenting with this concept include Grand Chain Stores, Inc., and A & P's "Plus." There are about 1,600 limited assortment stores nationwide today, up from 120 stores in 1970.

Limited assortment stores do not price each item, but count on the cashier to memorize prices, Mrs. Rushing adds.

HOSPITAL DIRECTOR—Kenneth P. Timmons, vice president and general manager of the Michoud division of Martin Marietta Aerospace, has been elected to the board of directors of Penland Memorial Methodist Hospital. Timmons' appointment coincides with Methodist Hospital's expansion of its facility to include 200 beds and expanded emergency treatment facilities. The hospital is located four miles from the NASA Michoud Assembly Facility and has a staff of nearly 1,000. Timmons has been with the hospital since 1970, serving as its director of medical services and as its medical director.

Rocky Mountain spotted fever, originally isolated in the Rocky Mountain region of the United States, continues to pose a threat to the residents of Mississippi and other South Atlantic states. "Fourteen cases out of the disease have been reported in Mississippi thus far, with the majority of these in the northern counties of the state," said Nancy Kay Sullivan, public relations director for the Mississippi State Board of Health. This compares with 510 cases reported nationwide. "This is about normal for this time of year," Sullivan said. "There were 20 cases reported from April to September of 1980 and 23 cases reported for the same time period in 1979."

Mississippi does, however, seem to be suffering from a larger than normal outbreak of ticks this year. "The dry weather made conditions favorable for the hatching of ticks, therefore we seem to have an increase in the number of ticks this summer," said Dr. Ted Brook, entomologist with the Mississippi Cooperative Extension Service.

The American dog tick is the most widely distributed tick found in Mississippi. It is one of several tick vectors of the Eastern type of Rocky Mountain spotted fever. "However, only 4 percent of the entire tick population is infected with the disease," Sullivan said.

The mortality rate is low for victims of spotted fever. "In the United States, the rate without treatment is about 4 percent and with treatment it can be reduced to 0 percent," Sullivan said. "These Mississippi residents have died as a result of the fever this year."

"In 1980, 61 percent of the cases reported nationwide were in the South Atlantic states," said Dr. Michael Gregg of the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta, Ga. "North Carolina, South Carolina and Oklahoma reported the most cases per state."

Males and females of all ages are subject to the disease, but in the eastern part of the United States, generally, more women and children contract the disease. "In 1980, 63 percent of the reported cases were less than 20 years of age," Dr. Gregg said.

"The most common symptom of the disease is a rash which appears about the second to fifth day on wrists, ankles and later spreading to all parts of the body," said Dr. Pat Harris, area pest management specialist, MCES.

"The symptoms most often complained of are headaches, intense aching in the region of the side and the lower back and marked depression. The incubation period is from three to 14 days in milder infections and from two to five days in the more severe infections," Dr. Harris added. "Fever may rise rapidly to 104 and 106 degrees F. In fatal infections, death may occur between the ninth and fifteenth day."

Crushed ticks and feces of infected ticks may produce infections through cuts and abrasions, but not through unbroken skin. Therefore, crushing ticks with fingernails can be a dangerous practice.

"If attachment to the skin does occur, apply a few drops of light weight oil to the tick. This should loosen it and you can remove it by pulling the tick by the head with a pair of tweezers."

Dr. Harris said that if a person has been exposed to ticks, they should consult with a doctor.

That confidence, he said, is based on the fact the system is developed 90 percent through "old, proven technology."

The system is based on the technology of a sewerage facility very similar to a large septic tank system with connecting leach field.

"Old technology has been used and an additional 'missing link' has been added to make the system a completely natural biological process," he said.

The missing link is a specially designed type leach field growing a reed grass.

Wolverton refers to the leach field as an anaerobic filter composed of a level of large stones and gravel covered over with smaller gravel and topped with pea stone or sand.

The sewer water pumped from the city to a large septic tank some 1.5 million gallons in the case of Bay St. Louis, would flow from gravity to this anaerobic filter field.

Because the system is based on the activity of anaerobic bacteria (bacteria which do not need oxygen), will live and feed on the wastewater which comes from the giant septic tank.

Most chemicals contained in the waste water are broken down by the activity of the bacteria, feeding, Wolverton said. Chemicals which cannot be broken down by the bacteria are absorbed by the reeds which grow on top of the sand or pea gravel.

Wolverton has developed a miniature system in a green house at NSTL. His tests have shown the anaerobic filter system with reeds can purify highly toxic wastewater, animal sewage, and even be used to purify polluted river water to drinking water. Tests have been conducted with the reeds isolated with the system and without the reeds.

Even without reeds the system greatly reduces the amount of toxic waste.

The reason according to Wolverton is because the system is closely related to a natural biological process.

Wastewater washed into rivers first seeps through the ground and then passes into a river. After trickling over stones in the ground and later in the river the water is eventually purified, he said.

Wolverton is also confident of the type of reed he has picked to be included in the system.

The reed has been determined to be resistant to cold and salt water in Louisiana and is found growing throughout almost all parts of the world.

He is confident the reed (Phragmites communis) is capable of doing the job, although experiments with other plants continue.

In other experiments in the past, water hyacinths were used in a slightly different system which involved having these plants grown on top of waste at the end of the treatment facility.

The plants grew at such a fast rate that Wolverton admitted they did present a problem.

He said the Phragmites communis reed does not grow as fast and would require harvesting only once or twice a year.

"If you wanted to purify the water more, then you would harvest the reed more often," he said.

He estimated the area needed to implement this new system in Bay St. Louis would require half the space currently utilized by the Bay St. Louis sewage.

Wolverton is currently a technical advisor to two systems already built using water hyacinths.

One of those systems is at Disney World in Florida and another is in San Diego, Calif.

He said he would act as an advisor to Bay St. Louis if that city decided to implement this new technology.

"It would be a lot easier than having to stay in contact with San Diego," he noted.

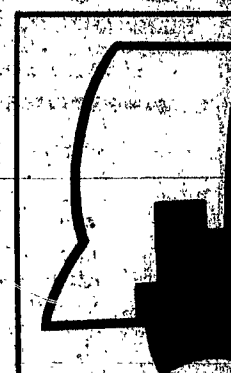

Eventually, Wolverton hopes the system will be included in the space program. He visualizes the system being used to purify wastewater in manned space stations traveling in the universe.

An Important Message To Present And Former Customers Of Mississippi Power Company

YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR A REFUND CHECK IN DECEMBER

In mid-1975, Mississippi Power Company filed suit against Peabody Coal Company for failure to deliver coal contracted for shipment to its generating plant in Harrison County. The company initiated this legal action to protect its customers from unnecessary fuel cost increases. Between June 1975 and December 1980, customers paid higher fuel costs through the fuel adjustment because Mississippi Power Company had to buy coal at higher prices than those provided for under a long-term contract with Peabody Coal Company. Mississippi Power Company and its coal supplier settled the dispute earlier this year. As a result of Mississippi Power Company's efforts, approximately $34 million will be returned to retail customers by check in a special mailing in December 1981.

Customers who received electricity from Mississippi Power Company between June 1975 and December 1980 are eligible for a refund based on kilowatt-hour usage during that five and one half year period.

Please don't confuse Mississippi Power Company with Mississippi Power & Light Company. The names are similar, but they are two different utilities. Mississippi Power Company, headquartered in Gulfport, serves customers in 23 southeast Mississippi counties.

No Action Is Required—You Automatically Will Receive A Refund Check— If All 3 Conditions Apply:

1. You received an electric bill for the month of December 1980, AND
2. You received service between June 1975—December 1980 and did not move during that period, AND
3. You have not moved since December 1980.

Return This Form If Either Of These Conditions Apply To You:

1. You moved anytime between June 1975—December 1980.
- OR
2. You have moved since December 1980.

This information will be used to verify service records and to obtain current mailing addresses of customers who have moved. If you can include a copy of a bill received at a previous address, it would be helpful.

Pulpit Points
BY DR. L.S. WALKER

"UNTO HIM BE GLORY" in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages. Paul wrote to the church at Ephesus - Eph. 3:21. "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it," he further declared - Eph. 3:25. "Take heed therefore unto the church, which he hath purchased with his own blood," he warned the Ephesian elders - Acts 20:28.

Obviously, I must stand with the church! Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Apostles, and all the early church fathers, did not less. Not once did our Lord ever demonstrate any reluctance to being identified with the church, all its human imperfections notwithstanding.

In the Revelation, the closing Book of the Bible, Christ in all the splendor of His High Priestly glory, is seen "in the midst of the churches." Rev. 1:12-20. Not only is our Lord the Founder and Foundation of the Church; He is also "Head over all things to the church," Eph. 1:22.

It was to an assembly of baptized believers that Christ gave an age-long, universal, exclusive commission to "go into all the world" and preach the gospel to every tongue and nation - Matt. 10:13-19; 28:18-20; Mark 16:15; Luke 24:45-48; John 17:18; Acts 1:8.
